Attached is a slide presentation on DIMCaP that I'd like to submit for a pre-publication review. As you discussed, there are alternatives, but for a variety of reasons I'd like the assurance of having a documented review by an entity outside RAS. Much of the detailed content is already in the public domain as a result of the RMD annual reports and the 2011 annual NARA Archivist Award to this FBI program.

b6 -2

Again, this was submitted to publisher, but I was promised I could get it pulled back if FBI had a problem with it. I hope to have it published with your blessings, even though it 'doesn't represent the views of FBI and DOJ' which I included. Again, this is a new edition of a chapter approved approximately 4 years ago by your office. We basically updated some of the research, the new programs and case studies to reflect the last few years. Please call if you have any questions or concerns. Any changes, edits you feel important can easily be taken to my co-writers who I am sure will approve anything I need to do to 'get your blessings' to move forward. All work was done on weekends and evenings, not on FBI time. (Not sure it matters but may be important.) Will send draft now.

Thank you.

Hello,

I am just hoping someone will give the ok to send this newer version to the Prepublications unit. It was recently submitted to SAGE by Susan Herman, the editor. She said there is only limited time to pull it, if I will not be permitted to have it published with my name.

There are some changes from the earlier version that you may want to look at. [redacted] said it was fine with him as it is. b6 -2

Would the person I submit it to be Dave Hardy. Please advise asap. I don't want to be out of compliance on a policy but can't hold up the publication of an entire textbook.

Thanks for your consideration of this request.

Hello,

Hopefully you will all approve of changes made. I was also able to add info such as the New Consumer Protection Bureau, a new program helping veterans who are fraud victims, and the new AG Guidelines that now encourage reporting of elderly and vulnerable adults for abuse and exploitation.

They will be sending this to publisher very soon. I know from the last time I did this that I was required to go through supervisors as well as a Publications Unit. I have been having a difficult time finding out who that is. Once you review (and do please let me know of any changes or suggestions), could someone direct me as to who at HQ should see this to conform with required policy for them to review.

Thanks—I certainly learned so much doing this (and yes, it was all weekends and evenings). Writing for a text book, (thankfully with co-authors) was a real challenge.

I've edited it only slightly, minor stuff.

The only thing I want you to definitely sign off on is the final paragraph--you should love it. Of course I want to hear comments on any of it, but I'd like special attention to the ending.

I only took out one resource [REDACTED], but we're now at 39 pages! That's another step in the right direction.

If you are fine with all this, I will forward it for copyediting next week. Richard should be able to read this version if you want to forward it to your co-authors.

Thanks very much for all your patience.

You've created another really terrific-- and very important-- contribution to the book.

My apologies for just getting back to you. Below sheds some more light on what you had referenced in your prior message I received via blackberry.

To the extent that we are lecturing outside of the FBI regarding things related to our employment, we are usually required to acquire "pre-publication" review, to ascertain that the information we are providing is not sensitive information, or information that is deemed to be FBI information.

The rationale is – the agency can't rely on each individual employee to accurately make the determination that the FBI-related info is really all from public sources. The agency has a right to confirm that the proposed disclosure does not contain agency info before the disclosure is made. By contrast, if you were doing a presentation on knitting and the benefits of certain yarns and needles, this would not require any pre-publication review because knitting is not related to FBI info and there is no chance that you would inadvertently co-mingle fbi info re knitting with public info re knitting in your paper/presentation.

My apologies for the added hoop to jump through. The point of contact at HQ that conducts these reviews is [redacted] of the Prepublication Review Unit.

I'm not sure if this would fall into a category necessitating pre-publication review, but students at my former graduate program at The George Washington University would like to interview me regarding application of my public administration (MPA) degree at the FBI. I have advised the two students—the editor and managing editor of a student-run academic journal, Policy Perspectives—that any comments I provide and any column stemming from the interview—could be subject to Bureau pre-publication review (if allowed at all), and they understand this. The interview is tentatively scheduled for Friday, 3/2.

Obviously, I would provide only positive commentary on my experiences as a supervisor and manager in the FBI and would focus my comments on ways I have been able to leverage in my professional career lessons learned and skills developed while obtaining my degree. I do not plan to discuss substantive specifics regarding my work [redacted]

I could provide on UNET the e-mail correspondence regarding the interview.

Could you provide some guidance regarding whether a column in the student journal based on an interview would be problematic. Could you also provide some guidance regarding the pre-publication review process if that would be necessary.

Many thanks,
Andy DiRosa
